How Michigan Administrators And Teachers Are Improving Methods

If you're a reasonably thoughtful parent of children attending a Michigan grade school or high school, you must have asked yourself these questions many times: "Are Michigan administrators and teachers making any efforts to improve the teaching methods in use when I was a kid? Are they studying ways to change subject matter so as to fit today's students for today's world of science and space travel?"

The answer is a confident, heart-warming "Yes"—700 Michigan teachers and educators are holding meetings all over the state at least once a month discussing these questions, theorizing about new teaching methods, trying to produce friendly school pilot experimental programs on a small scale, and watching carefully the results of these test efforts.

At St. Mary's Lake, near Battle Creek, more than 400 of these teachers and administrators met last week in a convention which pulled together all 20 of these special committees to hear experts discuss general education problems, and then gathered into their own special little business meetings to map their own work for the remainder of the year.

To a lay observer, the amazing thing about the meeting was the fact that the people there from outside of Michigan observed the workings of the groups with considerable interest. They were shown by Michigan in many fields, particularly efforts like the Mott Foundation, in making schools available to everybody in the community after school hours, and the use of conservation camps to teach whole classes right out in the wild about trees and animals and nature, and experiments such as being conducted in the use of large classes with a master teacher controlling teacher aides or apprentice teachers.

In sharp contrast was the attitude of the Michigan teachers, who were critical of what they considered their slowness in coping with the tremendous job of trying to educate as well as possible each child. They were impatient to get on with the task of finding new ways to reach the children who have in the past merely been pushed out of school and they were genuinely concerned about the instructor they referred to as the "Thank God it's Friday" teacher, a type of teacher as needing much new training and selling on better attitudes if the best possible schooling for every child is to become a reality in Michigan.

They heard William Van Til, head of the Department of Secondary Education of New York University, tell them that part of education's responsibility for tomorrow is to keep its balance, that it's necessary not only to develop scientists but perhaps even more, to develop people with the ability to come to grips with the general problems of society. People who have understanding of themselves, therefore can come more closely to understanding others.

This will take experimentation and it will require superior teachers, who can impart to the brightest youngsters.

He urged more debate on education fundamentals, not less. They also heard Dean Willard C. Olson of the University of Michigan School of Education warn that many of the new "cure-all" ideas weren't nearly as original as the authors thought, and that rash forays into every new pasture weren't necessarily the best ways to arrive at better education for Michigan boys and girls.

"The old ways aren't all bad," Dean Olson said, "and the new ways aren't all good." Constant appraisal of every experiment and constant appraisal of all methods now in use is vital.

What are these 20 different groups of teachers concerned over? Here's a sketchy picture, as it is important to realize that many of the members of these committees are teachers who are paying their own way to attend meetings, as well as lay people who have been invited in because of their specialized knowledge in various fields.

There's a committee on Agricultural Education. One of its important findings was the need for lay people as advisors in agricultural teaching and their urging for schools to use these people to improve the quality of these programs.

There's an Air-space Education committee, a strange sounding group to lay ears, but completely functional, after you've listened for awhile. They found that thousands of Michigan teachers had never been aloft. These people were in real trouble when

Junior in the 4th or 5th grade brought up problems on space travel or missiles and demanded answers. They hope to do it by making teachers more self-conscious, so they will pay more attention to everyday developments in this new era of planet exploration, and gear their teaching in areas where Junior's attention already is riveted.

Alcohol and Education committees are studying ways to bring better understanding about the whole problem; Better Human Relations group is vitally concerned in the field of race and religious differences and methods of working out peaceful and friendly co-existence among varied groups in the state; Business Education is the concern of a committee seeking to do a better job of preparing youngsters for office work.

Conservation Education concerns itself not only with natural resources, but such human resources as the gifted child; Core and General Education studies the so-called transitional room, where a teacher will have children not for a whole day, but for more than one period, seeking to see if it isn't possible, for instance, for a teacher to serve not only English but perhaps be an exposition in conservation, or human relations, or some other subject.

There are committees on curriculum Research, Economic Education, Education for Citizenship, Education of Exceptional Children, Elementary Education, Guidance, Health, Home and Family Living, Industrial Arts, Instructional Materials, Post-12th Grade Education, Physical Education, and Defense. They are composed of dedicated, able people. They cooperate with each other and they are convinced their work is vital and with possibility of adding stature to Michigan education.

They've added something new this year. In the past they've been content to write booklets about their findings and hope that good results would follow. This year they've added what they call an "Impact Project," under the leadership of Dr. Robert Koopman of the Department of Public Instruction and Perry D. Chatterton of the Michigan School of Education. They are working to produce school into action on many of the suggestions, so they can actually measure the results.

Dr. Lynn M. Bartlett, superintendent of public instruction, sees this as having the greatest possible significance for better Michigan education.

Many think he's very probably right.

MAKING GAS MONEY

By Charles L. Pollnold

Although trapping is considered a man's job, many school students and women do make "egg money" this way. Teens look forward to graduation, and buying cars. Other adults pick up a few dollars for their Saturday night. Red Fox, a 34-year-old man who has trapped since 1919, has trapped in, and for, the states of New York, Wisconsin and Michigan.

The professional trapper who has perhaps one hundred traps or more always wants to set them so that when he follows his trapping route it will lead him in a circle that brings him back to the starting point.

Experienced trappers like him know that the way traps are handled at the season start is an important factor. These men work hardest in the colder months when pelts are at their prime. After traps hang in the shed they gather some amount of "clean" the rust off and boil the traps in water mixed with oil of pine. From the time you take the traps out of this desecrator, be sure and wear gloves to prevent any further scent of yours from lingering on them. Another little trick of Red's is putting plenty of pine needles in the bottom of the sack he carries his traps in. This way he can say that a trap carrying Red has bought two homes and cars from a livelihood of trapping I'll go along with him.

Here are some of the fur bearers most trappers go after and the size traps that Red always uses: Mink, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

Skunks, weasels, and opossum all have a common trait. They like to crawl in and out of hollow logs. Sometimes they have their home there or in holes beneath stumps, on river banks, and ledges. If you find a log that has signs around the hole place a trap before it and cover it with leaves. Also you can place a trap some place close and bait it with something they like.

Raccoons like to find food along and in the rivers and streams. If you find a favorite feeding place of his, bait a trap with a frog and place it so the frog is sitting on the surface of the water. Coons are curious too. They like to fondle bright, shiny objects. Place something of that sort in the trap and leave it where it will be obvious. The coon will get it if placed in good coon territory.

Muskies, like coon, will sit on a log that is in the water. Place a trap at a point where it leaves the ground to get upon the log. It, too, should be covered. Find a stretch of stream where there are plenty of logs. Wade down to it so you can find these places to set the traps. You will be surprised at the sign you will see this way. By using a log that has signs from the river you will not leave the heavy scent of human like you would traveling on the ground.

Much of the time skunks are easy found on farms. Particularly ones that are deserted. Some farmers like to keep them because they are considered "good mousers". Be sure and get permission to trap on all farm lands and grounds that are not known to you. Skunks like to crawl in and out of foundations. Check the entrance for cobwebs, and leaves that may have been blown in it by the wind. If there are none, chances are you will strike by dirt. Also, you can smell skunk. (Phew). My eyes water at the thought of the first one I ever trapped. I thought it dead and reached down to pick it up. It was sleeping. But a word of caution. Skunks can be dangerous.

ous. A relative of mine in Wisconsin had one crawl under the house which he tried to retrieve. He got a full charge of skunk in the face. It did blind him for three or four days, but it can result in permanent loss of sight.

Fox is a crafty and sly fellow who has remained on the bounty list for a long time. There are several sets which can be made for him but very few are considered really worthwhile. This one here is thought to be one of the best. It is called, "Stump jump set." Find a stump that has a limb hanging a few feet above it; the one end of the string on the limb and on the other end your bait so it will dangle about three feet directly above the stump. Place your trap on the stump.

Now when "Shary Fox" comes along he will see the bait and jump on the convenient stump where the unseen trap is waiting. Be sure the stump is high enough so the fox cannot see your trap from ground level.

Beaver is about the best paying market there is in this state. Only two of them are allowed to be trapped by a trapper each season. The pelts, if prime, and in good condition can bring as much as $35.00. An article I read recently by a writer states the way to take beaver is set a trap at the entrance of the adobe. He also went on to say that a trap can be inserted in the house by removing the top. He never stated where this trapping was supposed to be taking place at, but what trapping I have done and from what I read claims every state he has trapped in, carries a fine for molesting this animal's den or for putting a trap too close to the entrance. If you are not familiar with trapping laws by all means be sure and get information from a reliable source. Contact a reputable trapper or Conservation Officer. They will be more than happy to help you. On different species of fur bearers the season does not run the same.

On skinning these animals there are as many different ways as there are to skin an animal itself. Nearly each one is taken care of differently. The small animal like weasel and otter, is skinned much differently than coon and beaver. So it would be far better to have someone show you these methods than it would be to read them. Perhaps a trapper you know will take you with him for a day and show you these tricks.

Mrs. Harold Longdyke of Birmingham, accompanied her son Harold, Jr. and Miss Gloria Eluskie on a long weekend trip to the Longdyke Hideout. While in the north the trio visited Mr. and Mrs. Larche of the Parkview Motel, Grayling, and at the Hideout entertained Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Roensch of Royal Oak and Mio for cards and a midnight feed. Mrs. O. N. Michelson has returned to Birmingham after vacationing at her Lake Margrethe cottage. Bernard Fowler shot a Canadian wild goose in his own yard last Thursday morning. Don Feldhauser, Walt Confer and Bernard Fowler spent Monday of last week at Sebawing, on a duck hunting trip. They had very good luck.

Another Russian Revolution . . .

Ask anyone to name the system of government existing in the Soviet Union and communism will be your answer. And, of course, it's the right answer. Property of every kind is owned communally, and a government of unlimited powers dictates how it is to be shared and used.

Even so, Soviet communism, current style, is considerably different in a number of important ways than was Soviet communism 1920-style. The avowed goal of the revolutionary leaders was expressed succinctly in the famous phrase: "From each according to his ability, to each according to his need." This simply meant that incomes and living standards were to be the same for all, regardless of the kind, quantity or quality of the work performed and that a truly classless society was to be created. That goal was fairly well approximated in communism's early days.

But things have changed—as Edward K. Faltermayer tells in a lengthy Wall Street Journal feature article, datelined Stalingrad.

Example: "In the clanging machine shop at Petrov Petroleum Refining Works, 29-year-old Konstantin Blinkov sweats over his lathe in a feverish effort to double his daily production quota of rotors for small centrifugal pumps.

"Mr. Blinkov's incentive is far from ideological. Simply put, it's plain hard cash, plus a desire for self-betterment. If he consistently doubles the quota, his monthly take-home pay will reach 1,500 rubles (equal to about $150) instead of his regular wages of 850 rubles." Comrade Blinkov also is going to a technical school at night, to learn skills which will qualify him for a better-paid work.

Mr. Faltermayer's point is that the Soviets are using the much-reviled capitalist incentive—namely, money—to get more production out of their labor force. And the money incentive is not confined to the workers. It is dangled in front of the factory directors, artists, scientists and so on.

This development, inevitably, has meant the end of the classless society. Luxury and privilege have appeared. "In fact," Mr. Faltermayer says, "that supposedly Western badge of authority and prestige—the status symbol—is probably more important in Russia than it is in the U. S." The top people in Russia are given country houses, chauffeur-driven limousines, and other material boons which are hopelessly beyond the reach of the masses.

To quote him again, "The chasm between the top and bottom levels of Soviet society leaves the great mass at the bottom still desperately poor by American standards." The extremes are indicated by the fact that a collective farmer makes something like $400 a year, while a leading scientist makes $2,000 a month. Inasmuch as the Russian top income tax rate is only 13 percent, the best-paid people are able to keep most of their incomes.

Another capitalist problem seems to have arisen in the Soviet Union—a government order has been issued demanding the "Abolition of High Living on the Expense Account."

Lip service is still paid to the principle of social equality in Russia, but that's about the size of it. The facts and the theory have little in common nowadays.

Interesting Events In Grayling 23 Years Ago

INTERESTING ITEMS OF NEWS GATHERED FROM THE FILES OF THE AVALANCHE OF 23 YEARS AGO

October 22, 1936

Word from Lansing that the Grayling Winter Sports Association, Inc., is going to receive state aid toward the construction of buildings at the winter park, that are so badly needed, wet with wild enthusiasm on the part of the Association members and officers. For fourteen years Grayling citizens have supported the winter sports projects generously and without complaint and a little outside aid will be most welcome. Tentatively it appears that the Conservation Department will take over the property of the park, but they, for the present at least, will expect our local Winter Sports Association to manage the activities of the park. Now that the matter of more and better building accommodations is to be remedied, together with various details of expansion planned, nothing can keep Grayling from continuing to be the "Capital of Winter Sports."

Willard Harwood and Fred W. Tatro have opened a fruit and produce store in the former Trombley property on Cedar Street and opened for business Friday. Mr. Harwood says that they started this business last June, trucking the products from Bay City, Saginaw and Detroit, and filling local orders direct. He says they are getting fresh fruits and produce daily in the summer time and three times weekly in winter, thus insuring fresh stock for their customers. They will sell at wholesale and retail.

Robert Coulter of Grand Rapids was a weekend guest of Miss Eva Swanson.

Ed Callahan and Charles Mosier were at Merrill for the opening of the pheasant season. Miss Frances Zoulek and Harold Edwards spent the weekend visiting at Miss Zoulek's home at East Jordan.

Mr. and Mrs. Benj. Jerome of Pontiac were in Grayling over the weekend closing their cottage at the lake.

Fred Hoelsi of Petoskey spent a couple of days here this week hunting birds, and visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Hoelsi.

Mrs. Emil Niederer, Mrs. George Olson, Miss Georgianna and Mrs. E. Clark drove to Traverse City Friday and spent the day. Miss Zoulek Wells of Mercy College of Nursing, Detroit, visited over the weekend at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Wells.

Miss Eunice Schreiber returned Sunday to Mt. Pleasant, where she is taking a commercial course and is securing her life certificate at C. T. T.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lovely and daughter Jean have returned from a ten-day vacation with relatives and friends at Bay City, Flint and Detroit.

Mrs. J. E. Fletcher and Miss Audrey Hewitt of Lansing returned home Tuesday after visiting for a few days at the home of the former's daughter, Mrs. George Schable.

Mrs. Carl Hanson returned Sunday from a several days' visit with her sister, Miss Mildred Corwin, at Lansing, a guest at the home of Carl Smith.

Mrs. Marius Hanson entertained eight ladies at an informal bridge luncheon Wednesday afternoon at her home on Lake Margrethe. Mrs. Oscar Hanson won high honors for contract.

Mrs. Russell Robertson has returned after visiting for the summer at the parental home in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson are making their home in one of the Randolph cottages at the lake. Gene Papendick, T. SanCarier and Jack Papendick spent the weekend pheasant hunting at Wheeler, Mich., and visited at the home of Ed Papendick. The boys brought back a number of fine birds.

Mrs. Clayton Strachey and Mrs. William McNeven represented the Grayling Chapter O.E.S. at the 5th anniversary of the Grand Chapter held Thursday, October 15th, at Grand Rapids. They were joined at Roscommon by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Green and Mrs. M. McClure. On their return they visited relatives and friends at Lansing and Mt. Pleasant.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Bryan Newell, Thursday of last week, a daughter, Sandra Berle.

Russell Beck and family have moved from the South Side into the Julius Nelson house located on the "flats."

Snow flurries are in the air today, the rain that began falling yesterday turning into snow. However, it melts as it falls.

Materials are on the ground for the new addition to be built on the Alfred Hanson garage. Koenig Construction Co. of Traverse City have the contract for the building. One item of special interest that was missed in last week's edition was a fishing trip to Northport when Bill Joseph showed up the other fellows in the group, including his dad, when he landed a 12 pound lake trout. This was one of the largest trout we have heard of being caught at this popular fishing place this season. Of course Bill was thrilled and justly feels himself quite the champion. Others in the party were C. J. McNamara, T. P. Peterson, Nels Corwin, Charles Moore and Morgan Paige.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Larson and daughters Lucille, Erdine and Aileen returned from a several days' visit with relatives at Jackson, Adrian and Tekonsha.

In honor of the birthday of her little daughter Janet Lee, who was two years old, Mrs. Rex Chappel entertained a number of little tots at her home. Lunch, including a pink and white birthday cake, was enjoyed and the little guest of honor was given many lovely gifts. Decorations were in Halloween style.

WHAT IS A TRUCK?

A truck is a lot of things . . . food for your table, clothes for your back, heat for your home. A truck is medicine for a sick child, gasoline for an automobile carrying a traveling salesman, merchandise for the store on the corner . . . A truck is something you simply could not do without—housewife, manufacturer, farmer, retailer, teen-ager, or whoever you may be. Because everything you eat, wear, or use depends on trucks to get to you . . . So, next time you see a truck on the road, remember—it's there because it's got a very important job to do—for YOU.

By FRANK G. MORRIS

Don't be surprised if State Senator Carlton H. Morris, of Kalamazoo, yields to mounting pressure and agrees to become a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor in 1960.

There is a good possibility, too, that former Gov. Wilbur M. Tucker, now Secretary of the Army, will be back from Washington next year to run against U.S. Senator Patrick V. McNamara, the Democratic incumbent.

Both names were mentioned time and again last week when Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield met for three days in Detroit with GOP leaders from throughout the state.

In their search for a candidate for Governor, the strategists named both Morris and Secretary of Commerce Frederick H. Hagler, of Grand Rapids. Mueller, 65, will be more active in Michigan politics in 1960 than at any time in his eventful career.

But there has been no indication from him that he might consent to run for elective office.

Perhaps supporters of Prof. Paul D. Bagwell, the unsuccessful nominee against Gov. Williams in 1958, kept away from the discussions in the belief they might not have been welcome. In any event, the dozens of leaders who visited Summerfield were pessimistic over the possibility that Bagwell would be stronger next time than he was a year ago.

Summerfield, who led the party to successive victories when he was the state Republican National Committeeman, did not go to Detroit to discuss politics. He was there in connection with an exhibit of new machinery to speed the mail.

Summerfield Will Not Run

He opened an office near the exhibit in the National Bank Building. The procession of Republican politicians started at once, and continued for three busy days.

The show for General made clear that he will not run for U.S. Senator or for Governor. Former GOP boss Frank S. McKay, one of Summerfield's first visitors, suggested in his Grand Rapids weekly news paper several weeks ago that the Postmaster General should become the candidate for Governor.

"I have no intention of running for elective office or of again becoming an official of the Republican Party in Michigan," Summerfield said with emphasis when newspaper reporters surrounded him.

And to old friends he said just as plainly that he will run for governor if they try to make him the boss of the Michigan campaign in 1960.

Because Summerfield is bitterly critical of the leadership of State Chairman Lawrence Lindemer and National Committeeman John Martin, there is some skepticism over his statement that he does not want to return to power in Michigan.

He secretly believes that Lindemer, Martin and former State Chairman John Feikens engendered the factionalism that produced the most disastrous defeats in the history of the party in this state.

Summerfield said he will help to turn Michigan back from the socialist program sponsored by Gov. Williams and Walter Reuther. But he insisted that personal leadership is out of the question.

He Left, And Then The Decline

Summerfield was elected Republican National Committeeman in 1944, and immediately became the top party leader. Republicans carried the state that year and again in 1946. Gov. Williams arrived in office in 1948 only because the GOP was determined to shake free from Gov. Sigler.

When Summerfield stepped up as the party's National Chairman in 1952, Williams was still around, having survived two recounts. But he was surrounded by 27 elected Republican office-holders. His social-liberal program was being blocked by big GOP majorities in the legislature.

Today, there is not one Republican elected official in Lansing other than the lawmakers. Democrats control every board and state commission. The Supreme Court is controlled by Democrats, having lost its former identity as a non-partisan body. And, as every taxpayer knows, the House of Representatives is divided equally and is controlled by neither party.

The one remaining vestige of GOP strength is the party's majority of 10 votes in the State Senate.

That's the record of the anti-Summerfield leadership. That's why the Postmaster General had so many visitors last week.

He has demonstrated here and nationally that he knows how to create party responsibility and win elections.

And no political organization in the country is more desperately in need of help than is the Michigan GOP that once was so proud of its record and so close to the voters.

Mrs. Larry Balch, Jr. Mrs. Larry Balch, Sr. and Mrs. Marie Akers, drove over to the Lansing Observer office on Thursday to drop off a letter to the editor.

NEWS from Pillsbury!

For the woman who still cares enough to bake her own bread!

An even better Pillsbury's BEST that makes a different dough: smoother, more lively. A different loaf: higher, lighter with texture almost like angelfood cake.

Perfect loaf made with this new improved flour from Pillsbury. Rises higher than any bread you've ever baked. Has a beautiful round, golden crust. Finished loaves stay fresher longer than those you bake with your present flour.

Good loaf made with ordinary bread flour. Ordinary bread flour has millions of random-size particles... that are responsible for large, tough holes, and uneven rising. Irregularities in particle size tend to darken bread crumb color.

Look for the
the new flour!

"I personally guarantee you'll get the best baking results of your life with Pillsbury's BEST new, improved bread flour, or the cost of all your ingredients will be refunded."

LESS MOVING ABOUT IN CRAWFORD COUNTY

(Special to the Avalanche)

New York, Oct. 13 — Contrary to the situation in many parts of the country, where urban expansion has been taking place at the expense of farm population, such has not been the case in Crawford County.

There has been no mass migration of local farm families seeking a different way of life in the cities. The great majority of the county farms, despite the consolidations that have occurred, are still owned and operated by individuals most of whom are making a good living from them.

Facts and figures on the situation locally and in the other counties across the country are brought out in studies made by the U. S. Commerce Department, the Department of Agriculture and others. They were made to determine how much of the nation's land area was populated, and to what extent, in the various parts of the country.

In Crawford County, since the 1950 census, the proportion of the population living in non-urban areas, defined broadly as communities with less than 2,500 people, has changed relatively little.

By contrast, there has been a definite drop in other sections during that time. For the United States at large, the non-urban population fell from 36.1 percent of the total population, in 1950, to 33.8 percent in 1958.

Crawford County's non-urban population, which was 4,100 in 1950, is now estimated at 4,400.

The Commerce Department reports that 33,000,000 people in the United States—one out of every five—changed their places of residence in the year ending March, 1958.

Of these, 67 percent moved to other places within the same county and 33 percent sought greener fields elsewhere.

The population of the Western states was found to be the most mobile and that of the Northeastern states the least. The South had the second highest proportion of movers.

Crawford County's growing network of roads and highways has created an economic improvement and, effectively, has brought the people closer together while enabling them to avoid urban congestion. It has made possible, also, the mushrooming of new plants and other facilities in one remote area.

RAILROAD FEATHERBEDDING:

$500,000,000 LOSS

TO THE NATION—INCLUDING YOU—EVERY YEAR

Featherbedding on the railroads — pay for work not done or not needed — is costing the American people the shocking total of more than $500,000,000 a year.

You pay for it every time you shop, because featherbedding costs are hidden in the price of everything you buy.

Obsolete union work rules, involving the railroad operating employees, are responsible for this gigantic burden. Right now, for instance, these rules require every diesel locomotive to carry a fireman—even though diesels have no fires to stoke, no boilers to tend.

The forthcoming negotiations between the railroads and the unions are urgently important to the whole nation.

In asking the unions to drop these featherbedding rules, all the railroads ask for is a fair day's work for a fair day's pay.

How To Get Proper Introduction

A teenage girl down South pens the following: "I have a cousin. She has a boyfriend who knows me and he happens to have a brother that my cousin wants me to like. I haven't seen him. How can I get acquainted with him so I can chat with him? Will you please give me some suggestions?"

The best way to meet this boy should be through the cousin, or more specifically, through the cousin's boyfriend, who should be able to arrange a meeting with his own brother. We can't see where the problem lies, unless the cousin has said nothing to her boyfriend about the fact that she would like her cousin to meet his brother. If she hasn't, there is no more appropriate or effective approach to the situation than to say, "I have a cousin who is a nice, sweet girl, as you know. Wouldn't your brother be interested in meeting her?" Another approach is for the cousin to say, "Why don't we get my cousin and your brother to doubledate with us for a movie?" But—lots of boys don't like to doubledate with their girlfriends and sisters, except on very special occasions.

There are other ways, but at any rate, the introduction to the cousin's boyfriend's brother should come through the cousin. The same teenager writes on: "Another boy finished school two years ago with my sister. I was in the ninth grade when he was in the twelfth. He is always chasing me around, wants me to like him, but I don't want him to like me. What shall I do to make a decision?" It seems to us, obviously, that she has already made her decision. She doesn't want the boy's attentions. So the best thing to do is tell him in a friendly, but emphatic manner, "Thanks, but No Thanks."

If you have a teenage problem you want to discuss, or an observation to make, address your letter to FOR AND ABOUT TEENAGERS, NATIONAL WEEKLY NEWSPAPER SERVICE, FRANKFORT, KY.
